

Maggy was born in 1984 and diagnosed with Cystic Fibrosis at 9 months old. She developed the typical stubbed fingers and chronic cough associated with CF. Her first hospitalization was when she was six years old, and they became more frequent as she got older, along with home IV meds. She lived a life that included daily pills and breathing treatments. Her chance to live out her dreams was cut short when she passed away in 2004, at age 20.

Cystic Fibrosis is a genetic disease. We have seen it in our family more than once, and will likely see it again in the future. Thank you for supporting the cause of finding a cure.
